To learn more about how we work with these issues, please read our privacy policy: Toca Boca introduces the classic concept of decorating a character but with a range of additional features and animations to add to the fun in Toca Mini! You can add eyes, mouths, nazas and eyebrows that animate once included in the 'Mini', including letting the Mini blink, smile and even sneeze! With 60 colors and 78 reversible stamps kids can have hours of fun creating exactly the 'Mini' they want, whether it's a scary monster, a superhero or a friend. Versatile stamps add details like hats, socks, clothes and there are plenty of colorful backgrounds to choose from as well. You can even take a photo at the end to share it with your friends. I like to make the face... do you think it looks ugly, I don't - 5-year-old I think it's great - 7-Year-old Girl Develops Creativity and Imagination Encourages Artistic Skills This app stands out for us, compared to the range of similar apps 'decorate an image' due to the meaning and emotion that can be easily displayed through facial features. With this app it is really possible to see how moving an eye a fraction can turn the character from cute to scary which adds a new dimension to what kids can learn through this game. We found that our little testers enjoyed with facial features, as well as the decoration of all aspects of character and background. A particular child enjoyed creating an 'angry boxer' by completing the tattoos on his arms! We would love to see more designs to wear on clothing as well as a wider range of backgrounds. This app is great for developing a creative side on screen, but can also act as inspiration for creative offline play as well. If your child enjoyed this game, then think about how to give them similar opportunities with a character drawn/printed on paper and a range of decorations. There are plenty of kits you can buy with stickers and glitter and endless decorations, but you could also simply cut shapes similar to Toca Mini's and encourage your child to color them and decorate their character with them. A very economical way to have great creative play. Once finished, you can even assemble their creations on the card and let your child create and play with a whole family of characters they themselves have created, whether monsters, hasdas or friends. While your child is playing with this app we also encourage you to take the opportunity to discuss emotions. By moving facial features around the character you may seem happy, sad, angry, scary, cute, ugly - this can help you discuss your understanding of these emotions, but also to discuss how superficial emotions can be and how there is much more to a person than they seem. Tap Mini, like many Toca Boca apps, gives you the opportunity to create your own small 3D person, or 'mini'. It has the design as designing a new doll, giving it packaging to add to the effect. The pattern inside the box can give you inspiration and ideas as well, with themed patterns that can be based on your mini look on: for example, a wave background for a mermaid or a sea captain. The potential for creativity is (almost) limitless. The actual design is slightly limited, but very creative. There are many mouth, nazas, eyes and eyebrow designs to choose from to customize your mini, but you don't have the option to add 3D objects like sticky ears or eyes on the stems. There is also a limit of two eyes, two eyebrows, a mouth and a nose, and they can only be put on the head. Personally, I would prefer that the features weren't limited and give you the option to place them anywhere, as this is a creative game. To color the skin you have to drag your finger, where you can use as many colors as you want. Tap Mini lets you rotate your character around 360 degrees so you can look around your mini, and add details with shapes and marks in a variety of color tone sizes. There are many different styles of shapes to design, including some familiar outlines such as cobwebs, suns and leaves. I like the way facial features are animated, and the mini moves and pulls poses when you're not designing, giving it a personality that can work with Design. Overall, I like the style of Toca Mini, giving older children the opportunity to make a more advanced design, but not too complicated. I think this game is for young and imaginative thinkers, who like to redesign one shape over and over again. Compared to other Toca Boca apps (which are largely for preschoolers), I'd say this is for older kids: kids who can understand how to change colors, and make them look the way they imagine it. For these, Toca Mini is a lot of fun. This story, Toca Mini review: Kids can make cute digital people was originally published by Macworld U.K.. Another interesting thing would be if you could create a house the Play mini's boxes (with furniture), and with mini games in each room.
